- An IRA - is a tax-sheltered plan that allows you to provide for your financial future.
- Traditional IRA - If you are under age 50 in 2026 the maximum IRA limit for contributions that you can make is $7,500, up to the amount you make in taxable income in 2026. For example, if you only make $4,000, this is the maximum you can contribute. If you turn 50 or older in 2026, the maximum you can contribute to your IRA account is $8,600, up to but not exceeding your 2026 taxable income. This amount includes the $7,500 limit that everyone qualifies for, as well as an additional $1,000 catch-up contribution. All and/or part of your contributions may be tax deductible.
- Roth IRA - If you have both a traditional IRA and a Roth IRA, it is important to know that the 2026 limits apply to combined contributions. Therefore, if you are under age 50, you can invest $2,000 into your traditional IRA and up to a $5,500 maximum into your Roth IRA, or any other combination as long as the total doesn't exceed $7,500. If you are over 50, any combination of investment up to $8,600 is allowed by the federal government. If you have a Roth IRA only, then your maximum 2026 contribution limit is $7,500, and if you are over 50, your maximum contribution limit is $8,600.
